Portland State University, Area Community Colleges Join In Registration Hot Line Experiment

Portland State University and five area colleges -- including two in Southwest Washington -- have joined together to help students find and register for needed classes at the last minute without having to check with each individual campus.

PSU and the five colleges -- Portland Community College, Clackamas Community College, Mt. Hood Community College, and Clark College and Lower Columbia Community College in Southwest Washington -- will be tied together in a special telephone network during a two-day period, Thursday and Friday, September 19 and 20, allowing instant access to information on course availability. Classes begin at most campuses the following week.

A Registration Hot Line will be available in each institution's central advising office. The hot lines will be staffed by operators who will identify open class sections and register students by telephone. In other words, if all the sections of a particular course are filled at one campus, students will be able to check with the central advising office which, using the hot line, will determine the availability of that course at the other campuses and, if necessary, register the students immediately.

This two-day pilot program was developed by the Portland Area University-Community College Liaison Committee. If successful, the program could be expanded in the future.

OACW Clubs Hold Gala Celebration

The Fluer De Lis Club of the Oregon Association of Colored Women's Clubs, Inc. held their 37th year Anniversary with a picnic at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Luther Bell on Labor Day weekend. Over one hundred guests were in attendance. There were games, prizes, fun for everyone who came, and plenty of delicious food.

Carrie L. Holiday, State President, reported that there is room for more women, from 18 years old and up, to join the organization. If you enjoy the company of other Christian women doing busy work in and around the community, then this is the organization for you. For more information, contact Carrie L. Holiday -- 281-9829.

Peninsula Park Community Center

All classes at Peninsula Park Community Center give children an opportunity to develop movement skills, social skills, and self-esteem. By providing a non-threatening environment away from home, children can have the satisfaction and the success of expressing ideas, making suggestions, and contributing to the group in a positive way. Class activities stimulate imagination and creativity.

Group social skills, such as learning to listen, cooperation, following directions, and respecting others are important parts of the class. When children accept the challenge and take the risk, they are instantly rewarded for trying their best.

Peninsula Park Fall Registration runs Sept. 16-27 at Peninsula Park Community Center, 700 N. Portland Blvd., Mon-Fri 10 am - 6 pm for pre school to adults.

For more information, call Peninsula Park 823-3620.
