Ed Elliott Human Rights Award Goes To Ken Barry

to human and civil rights in Oregon last year. Former winners have included attorneys, leaders of the American Civil Liberties Union, individuals who have opposed censorship -- and last year, Lavonne Lobert-Edmo of the Salem Education Association.

Now they have bestowed this award upon one of their own again. He is one of those people who lives what he advocates. By his own example, he has shown what can be done if we all work together. He builds self esteem of you g people and points out to them their many options. You will recognize him as a leader in the black community.

For years, he has been the driving force behind a day-long celebration for Martin Luther King Junior's birthday. An event, staged with a cast of hundreds and televised on cable television, it attracts a wide and appreciative audience.

Within his own local, the award recipient has been instrumental in building a strong community and human relations program and is admired by all who are lucky enough to work with him.

The Ed Elliott Human Rights Award has been awarded to Ken Barry of the Portland Association of Teachers.

Traditionally, the Oregon Education Association's Ed Elliott Human Rights Award has been bestowed upon a non-member. Last year, however, the Board of Directors determined that members would also be eligible for this award -- and it was presented to one of our members. That scenario happens again this year. A member is receiving the award. The Ed Elliott Human Rights Award is given to the individual who is viewed as having made the largest contribution
