rooms, computer labs, a library and a performing arts center.

"The center will give us the opportunity to make education a constant, positive experience for Portland's inner-city youth," Hopson explained. "This partnership with Portland State reinforces the center's value to the community."

Hopson founded SEI 11 years ago to work with parents, teachers and school principals to identify youth at risk of dropping out of school, becoming involved in gangs or drugs, or otherwise not living up to their potential. Each year, more than 700 students from seven North Portland schools participate in the SEI program to build self esteem, correct negative behaviors and provide positive alternatives. School attendance and grades among SEI students have improved by 50-70 percent, and negative behavior has been drastically reduced.

SEI operates in partnership with Portland Public Schools on the campuses of seven Northeast Portland schools. The focus of the SEI program is on improving grades and attendance, building self-esteem and creating career opportunities for at-risk, inner-city youth. SEI has served 12,000 students since it began, and the program currently serves 700 students each year.

The Private Industry Council Celebrates National Employ An Older Worker Week

Jim McAllister, Vice Chair of The Private Industry Council (TPIC), will read a proclamation signed by Mayor Vera Katz proclaiming March 14th through 20th Older Worker Week in the City of Portland.

Dennis Cole, President of The Private Industry Council moderated a panel discussion between employers represented by: Ken Mulligan of The Bombay Company, Lloyd Center; Joe Wahl of the City of Portland, Bureau of Personnel; Marianne McGee of Clackamas County Social Services; Velma Warren of First Interstate Bank of Oregon; and Patience Talcott of Northwest Temporary Services and TPIC staff. TPIC staff will ask the employers mentioned above to respond to questions relating to how older workers can best present themselves to prospective employers and how to address incidents of age discrimination. Questions were prepared and edited by current trainees of TPIC's Older Worker Training Program.

The Private Industry Council is a private, non-profit organization dedicated to providing employment and training opportunities to low-income residents of Multnomah and Washington counties and the City of Portland. In the case of older workers, services are extended to Clackamas County as well. Services of TPIC's Older Worker Training Program are funded by the Job Training Partnership Act and the Senior Community Service Employment Program with grants from The National Council on Aging, Inc. and the State of Oregon Senior Services Division.

Since its incorporation in 1987, The Private Industry Council has placed more than 8,500 individuals in unsubsidized, private sector jobs.
