Portland business entrepreneur, Roy Jay, was recently elected to the National Convention and Tourism Advisory Board of the National Black Chamber of Commerce.

Jay, is President, CEO of Oregon Convention and Visitor Service Network and several other businesses headquartered in Portland. According to Oscar Coffey, President of the National Black Chamber, Jay was selected because of his expertise in sales, marketing, public relations and also due to his organizations track record of positive involvement in the African American convention and tourism industry, which now is estimated at over $30 billion dollars annually.

Jay's selection exceeded 70 other nationwide recommendations, according to Coffey and makes him the first and only representative on the advisory board from the Pacific Northwest.

The native Portlander's involvement in the convention and visitor industry spans back many years. He has served on the board of directors for the Portland Oregon Visitors Association for 8 years, recipient of the 1992 POVA "President's Award" for his efforts in promoting conventions and tourism and has become one of the biggest sources for providing convention and visitor sales referral leads to businesses involved in the hospitality, convention and tourism industry.
