Free Weatherization And Energy Conservation Workshops

For many households, fall and winter months mean a drafty home and shocking utility bills.

This year, with energy price increases slated for Northwest consumers, heating a home affordably will be harder than ever. To help people prepare, the Community Energy Project is offering free workshops on simple home weatherization and energy conservation.

The workshop emphasizes do-it-yourself ideas that anyone can use. Participants will learn how to install effective weatherization and conservation materials using only basic tools such as scissors and screwdrivers. Other topics include what the major home energy uses are, how to adjust water heater thermostats, when to get a furnace tune-up, and where to find further information and assistance with home energy conservation.

Low-income households can qualify for a free kit of materials worth approximately $120. The kit includes reusable plastic storm windows, door weatherstripping, pipe insulation, and a fluorescent light. To qualify, a family of four must have an annual income less than $20,350. A single person must have an annual income of less than $14,250. Enrollment is limited to City of Portland residents. For low-income senior citizens (age 55 or older) or people with disabilities, Community Energy Project volunteers are available to assist with the installation of materials as needed.

From October through January, a total of 35 workshops will be held in neighborhoods in North, Northeast, and Southeast Portland (complete schedule is attached). People interested in attending should register by calling the Community Energy Project at 284-6827.

Community Energy Project, Inc. is a private nonprofit organization which has been operating in Portland since 1979. Principal funding for the workshops is provided by the City of Portland Bureau of Housing and Community Development.

Home weatherization and energy conservation workshop: Tired of the cold and high utility bills? Attend a free workshop to learn how you can stay warm and save money this winter. Low-income households can qualify for a free kit of materials worth $120. Owners and renters can participate. To register, call the Community Energy Project at 284-6827. Wheelchair accessible. Sign interpretation upon request.
