OPB To Participate In Mathline Aimed At Middle School Math Teachers

The Public Broadcasting Service (PBS) recently announced in Washington, D.C. that Oregon Public Broadcasting has been selected to participate in the first phase of Mathline, PBS's new educational service dedicated to improving the professional skills of mathematics educators and the math achievement of students.

"We couldn't be more pleased to be one of the first stations in the country to offer Mathline," said Maynard Orme, president and CEO of OPB. "OPB is committed to being the state's most accessible learning resource, and serving the educational needs of Oregon. Mathline is a valuable, high-quality service, and we look forward to collaborating width the Oregon Department of Education to distribute it to Oregon teachers and provide them on going support."

Mathline, unveiled in May 1993, is the nation's first telecommunications-based math service dedicated to increasing the math achievement of young people. The service is a direct response to the National Education Goal of making American students first in the world in math and science by the year 2000. Mathline's first initiative is directed at the training of middle school teachers (grades 5-8) and will be available beginning in the fall of this year. The "Middle School Math project" has three components: (1) it will feature a series of videos to help teachers learn to teach math in newer, more innovative ways; (2) two national videoconferences for teacher-participants; and (3) and "electronics learning community" where the teachers will be on line with fellow teachers and a "mentor teacher" who will support their classroom implementation of the standards.

The video series will feature teaching techniques that model the standards set by the National Council of Teachers of mathematics (NCTM). These include building students' skills of problem-solving, reasoning, communicating, and making connections.

The video series and videoconference will be produced by Thirteen/WNET, New York. The "Middle School Math Project" is funded in part by the AT&T Foundation and Carnegie Corporation of New York. Mathline is being developed in cooperation with NCTM.

Mathline, will integrate a variety of technologies--including video, satellite, computer, and VSAT (Very Small Aperture Terminal)--to provide a variety of interactive educational services for teacher sand schools. OPB will serve as the hub to deliver the service to schools, throughout Oregon and provide needed support.

Crime Stoppers Case #94-06: Residential Armed Robbery

Portland Police, in cooperation with Crime Stoppers, are asking for your help in solving a residential armed robbery.

On Thursday, January 20, 1994, at approximately 1:00 in the morning, three subjects, armed with handguns, broke into a house in the 4200 Block of N Michigan.

The home was equipped with an alarm system, but at the time it was not activated.

OMSI Auction Scholarship Benefits ASK Center

More than $2,000 was raised for the OMSI ASK Center at the Oregon Museum of Science and Industry's annual auction January 22.

The funds will help support the OMSI ASK center, an after school science program in North Portland.

The money was raised from the sale of table centerpieces at OMSI's gala auction. Each centerpiece was a dramatic display of light and flowers--featuring fresh lilies in an illuminated, water filled bowl.
