

AFRICA INSIGHT Let The Thanksgiving Reach Africa

By Promise King
Just last week, the aroma of roasted turkey mesmerized my nose, as Americans rollicked in the merriment of the Thanksgiving holiday. To many of my peers it was a time to take stock and give thanks to those who have helped them through the vicissitude of life and also a time to thank the Almighty. To some it was opportune time for a family reunion. To the average worker, like

By Professor Mckinley Burt

Sydney Izu, it was time for a free turkey from his boss. And to others it was time to extend a helping hand to someone in need.

It's amazing how many joined in the ritual of pouring out in the cold street to feed the poor. The smell of hunger vanished and the smiles of satisfaction graced the table of even homeless Americans.

If truly this is a thanksgiving time, with gratitude given to those who built this great country, then Americans must remember and touch Africa with thanks and praises.

Let Americans remember those hard-working, able-bodied Africans who were brought here to labor and sweat for the growth of this nation. The railroad workers, the Buffalo soldiers, and the servants who were wide awake while their masters snored in sleep. I mean let the turkey aroma reach the land of Africa, whose resources helped foster the industrial revolution of this blessed land.

That thanks can come in-kind and in cash. It pains me to the marrow to note that after being milked by the powers that be, Africa today stands depleted and rejected in the economic sense of it.

Let America thank Africa with the technology it badly needs to tap its abundant natural resources. Yes, to whom much is given, people always say, much is expected. Let the thanks also reach Africa.
