New Line Cinema's new psychological horror film, In the Mouth of Madness, starring Sam Neill, Jurgen Prochnow and directed by John Carpenter, will open in theatres everywhere on Friday, February 3, 1995.

Imagine a novel so overwhelmingly hypnotic, so tremendously horrifying that it paralyzes its audience with fear and turns its most sensible readers insane. Sutter Cane (Jurgen Prochnow) is this century's most widely read author. His novels have been translated into 18 different languages and spawned a billion dollar industry. When Cane vanishes just days before he's expected to deliver his latest manuscript, his publisher

Jackson Harglow (Charlton Heston) hires John Trent (Sam Neill) to investigate his mysterious disappearance.

With the writer's fans whipped into a public frenzy, Trent believes the case is nothing but an ill conceived publicity stunt -- until he and Cane's editor, Linda Styles (Julie Carmen), travel to New England in search of clues. There, they wind up in a town called Hobbs End, a sleepy hamlet that cannot be found on any ordinary map - a fictional village that exists only in Cane's novel.

Has the investigation unearthed a fantasy world or has reality blended with the macabre imagination of Sutter Cane?
