Toward A Community Of Non-Violence

Recognizing that the faith community must become a partner in community efforts to address the problem of violence in our community, the Portland United Methodist Association for Metropolitan Ministries (PUMA) is hosting a workshop entitled, "Toward a Community of Non-Violence" on Thursday evening, September 14, 7 p.m. - 9 p.m., at Laurelwood United Methodist Church, 6148 S.E. Holgate in Portland. It is open to the public and there is no charge.

Featured speakers are The Rev. Fred Smith, Assistant Director for Violence and Substance Abuse, Interfaith Health Program, The Carter Center, Atlanta, Georgia, and Annette Stixrud, R.N., Program Director of Northwest Parish Nurse Ministries and Chair of a local task force on violence and the faith community.

Rev. Smith is also President of the executive committee of the National Interfaith Alliance Against Substance Abuse (NIAASA). He states, "The mission of NIAASA is to enlist the faith community in fulfilling its unique role as a catalyst bringing positive change and awareness in response to issues arising from the use, misuse, and abuse of alcohol, tobacco and other drugs." He is currently developing a national data base of exceptional interfaith and congregational models of health ministries.

Ms. Stixrud is actively engaged locally in educating the faith community on its role in addressing violence and health issues.

She works with churches and organizations throughout the Northwest on developing prevention strategies within congregations to promote non-violence and provide positive re-enforcement to children in the community. An advocate for children, she emphasizes the need to build on children's strengths and virtues to enable them to cope with the stresses in today's society.

Young Adults To Gather In Seaside

Young adults from around the Pacific Northwest will gather in Seaside October 27 - 29, 1995 to celebrate the annual young adult conference of the Archdiocese of Portland. "United in Christ" will be the theme for this year's conference as Catholics ages 18 to 40 years old, married and single, come together for a weekend of prayer and inspiration. It's the largest of gathering for young adult Catholics in the Northwest.

This conference generates much enthusiasm among participants. Last year's coordinator, Kevin Miller, noted that "it is a terrific place to meet other young Catholics. We had people from Grant's Pass, Milton-Freewater, Spokane, even British Columbia last year, plus many people from all over the Portland area."

This year's coordinator, Sally Peterson, expects an even larger attendance, "the conference grows every year. People have a great time and tell their friends about it. Also, this year we have a very well known speaker, Dr. Scott Hahn."

The Keynote address will be presented by Dr. Scott Hahn.

Dr. Hahn currently teaches theology at the Franciscan University at Steubenville, OH., and is a nationally known speaker on Catholicism and the Bible.

Hahn has appeared on the Eternal Word Television Network (EWTN), and can be heard on Portland's radio station KBVM Wednesdays 5:00 - 6:00 p.m. and Sundays 8:00 - 9:00 p.m. he is also known through his video and audio taped talks.

The activities planned for the weekend include a Taize prayer service, a reconciliation service, a bonfire, and a dinner and dance on Saturday evening.

Sunday morning Archbishop William J. Levada, Archbishop of Portland, will celebrate Mass.

The liturgy will be part of the archdiocesan observance of World Youth Day. Pope John Paul II has selected October 29 as World Youth Day in 1995.

For information concerning registration, contact the Office of Youth and Young Adult Ministry, Archdiocese of Portland, 2838 E. Burnside Street, Portland, OR 97214, (503) 234-5334. The conference registration fee is $50.

New Publishing Scholarship Award

Black Women in Publishing (BWIP) announced that the organization will present its first scholarship award at a gala luncheon ceremony on Saturday, September 23 from 12:00pm to 3:00pm at Birdland located at 2745 Broadway at 103rd Street, New York.

The highlight of the afternoon's festivities will be the award presentation to the finalist of the BWIP publishing scholarship competition, held earlier this year.

Special invited guests will include Susan Taylor, editor-in-chief of Essence Magazine and author of "In the Spirit", a compilation of her motivational thoughts on living a fulfilling life; and award winning journalist, Herb Boyd, who co-edited "Brotherman: the Odyssey of Black Men in America", an anthology of writings by African American men.

The awards, a milestone in the organization's sixteen-year history of service to women and men of color in the print media field will be presented annually to a matriculating student, with intentions of pursuing an editorial career in print media.

The scholarship fund was established by BWIP in 1993 in memory of Anna Marie Muskelly-Bryan. As a founding members and dedicated supporter of the organization, Muskelly-Bryan had a reputation for sharing her skills and vast knowledge with young newcomers to the industry. It is only fitting that her legacy live on through the scholarship.

Tickets for the awards ceremony can be purchased for $35 in advance or $40 at the door.

The admission price is tax deductible. For more information about the awards luncheon or the scholarship, call (212) 427-8100.

Black Women in Publishing is a non-profit professional organization open to all women and men working or interested in the world of print media. The organization's goal is to create, develop and maintain a network to provide information, encouragement and support for professionals, students and others interested in the industry.

Faulkner Endures Rigor Of Citadel Training

Shannon Faulkner endured the rigors of military training Monday at The Citadel, marking the first time in 152 years a woman was a part of the college's prestigious Corps of Cadets.

Faulkner's admission to The Citadel ended the state-funded tradition of single-gender education after years of litigation.

Along with the men in I Company, Faulkner stood in the trademark red and white checkered courtyard within her barracks while ranking cadets demonstrated the proper way to stand at attention, face and salute superiors and march.

In signing in, the cadets were to stand about two feet from a table, find their names on a roster and sign in next to it - all within three seconds.

When it was Faulkner's turn, officers formed a ring around her to blackout the media.

"By the press singling her out, it makes it more difficult training the other cadets and makes it more difficult to train her," senior cadet Mike Murphy said.

The media followed Faulkner, 20, to the cadet store where she picked up her gray duty uniforms. She has been followed since March 1993, when she began the legal quest for admission to The Citadel. She charged the previously all-male state-funded school with sex discrimination for rescinding her acceptance once officials learned she was female. Her lawyers argued a state-funded school should not be allowed to exclude women.

And the legal wrangling continues now that Faulkner has qualified for the band. A federal district judge must determine whether she should move from the barracks specially equipped for her safety with security cameras and a private bathroom to the one where the flute player will live with all band members.

More than 600 cadets made up the freshman class. Faulkner is an academic junior but a part of the military training for freshmen - called knobs because of their shaved heads.

Faulkner's brown hair was not among the locks scattered on the barbershop floor as she is only required to wear her hair above the collar and away from the face so it does not interfere with headgear. She cannot wear makeup while in uniform and jewelry must be limited to a wrist watch and one ring.
