Lucky Student Could Be 'Bound For Belize' This July

Four high school students will spend five days in Belize this July discovering the wonders of the world's rain forests.

Pacific Power is sponsoring a contest to send four high school students to Belize, a small country in Central America. The students will attend a Tropical Forest Ecology Course to gain an understanding of the importance and the vital functions tropical rain forests play in the local, regional and global environment.

Students will also learn numerous ways to protect the earth's valuable ecosystems; gain an understanding of Belize and its culture; learn about ancient Mayan civilization; and observe the complexity of species interaction within tropical forests.

According to the company's local manager, Sheila Holden, the contest is a natural extension of the company's real work in Belize. Last November Pacific Power joined forces in an unprecedented international effort to help reduce greenhouse gas emissions and protect 120,000 acres of tropical rain forests in Belize.

"Through domestic tree planting, and now the purchase of rain forest acreage in Belize, the company is testing strategies to address carbon dioxide emissions," Holden said. "The company believes that solutions to environmental challenges will be based on sound scientific research. Because of that, we are pleased to sponsor the 'Bound for Belize' contest to encourage students to search for solutions to our environmental problems."

Students will be selected based on several criteria, including an essay competition and a demonstrated interest in the environment either through school course work, lifestyle city's chief transportation planner, Steve Dotterrer, says there is no specific proposal on what should be done.

Portland architect Peter Wilcox, received hard knocks last year from officials for his criticism of the median, but he is on the drawing board again, this time he wants to present a model for study.

The last time the issue was studied was in 1992, when the city found improvements in the carrying capacity of the boulevard had occurred with the installation of the median, the limitation on left turns and the removal of on street parking.

The entire median project was built in 1979 at the total cost of $7.8 million.

choices, outside work or participation in a community environmental program. The essay question is: "Describe an environmental problem and your solution to it." To be eligible to participate, students must be enrolled in a high school within either Pacific Power's or Utah Power's service area, have a cumulative GPA of 2.5 or better, and be enrolled in a science class or belong to a science or environmental club during the 1995-96 school year.

The winning students will fly to Belize to attend the Tropical Forest Ecology Course from July 1-5. The course is taught by the Programme for Belize, a private forest management and preservation program that promotes conservation of the natural heritage of Belize and the wise uses of its natural resources. A chaperone will accompany the students.

Omega Psi Phi Donates Food Baskets

In December, the Brothers of the Omega Psi Phi fraternity passed out food baskets for Christmas. Bros. Jerome Mouton and Kenny Adair of the Zeta Nu Chapter organized the food basket drive. There was a total of 31 baskets given out to needy families. The families ranged from low-income, large families with kids, to senior citizens. Food donations from Fred Meyers Inc. and E&M market, and cash donations from many private individuals helped to make this the most successful food basket drive

"ever" for the Zeta Nu Chapter. The Bros. of Zeta Nu also made substantial food item donations. Each basket contained a Turkey, vegetables, fruits, potatoes, rolls, and cake mixes.

The families who received the food baskets were located in the north, northeast, and southeast areas. All the families who received a basket were deeply appreciative of the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity's efforts. This was the eighth consecutive year that the Bros. of the Zeta Nu Chapter would like to thank all of those grocers and individuals for their generous donations during the Christmas season.
