Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey is celebrating their launch on America OnLine by asking users to help name the circus' new baby elephant. Born Jan. 1, the newborn's measurements were 188 pounds, 36 inches tall and 39 inches from trunk to tail.

PCC Builds Training Center

Portland Community College is constructing a work force training center in the southeast industrial district, across the street from OMSI. The three-story, 31,000-foot building is expected to be completed in July.

The Central Portland Workforce Training Center was art of a laundry list of items proposed to voters when the district asked for approval of a $61.4 million bond measure in 1992.

Following its passage, the college has spent the last several years upgrading equipment, repairing buildings undertaking new construction on its campuses. The $4.4 million Central Portland Workforce Training Center is one of the last projects in this building campaign.

Officials envision the new center as a hub of business and technical education in the central Portland area and project that more than 10,000 persons a year will take classes at the Center. The new training center is located on the corner of Southeast Clay and Water streets, and meets the goal of providing for training needs for the downtown business community and close-in southeast Portland.

Waters Elected To United Way Board

Northeast Portland resident, Elizabeth Waters, has been elected to serve a three-year term on the United Way of the Columbia Willamette's board of directors.

Waters, urban minority manager with Nike, Inc., was elected to the board at the organization's 76th annual meeting, held Thursday at the Portland Marriott Hotel. Board members are responsible for determining the strategic goals of the organization, formulating policies, and approving and monitoring its finances.

Waters joins Mike E. Bershaw, Deloitte & Touche; Sandra McDonough, vice president, Pacific Gas Transmissions; Robert G. Miller, CEO, Fred Meyer, Inc.; Mark Brandon, Seafirst Bank; and Richard L. Woolworth, Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Oregon as first-year board members.

Additionally, the following officers were elected. Michael M. Morgan, an attorney at Tonkon, Torp, Galen, Marmaduke & Booth, begins his first term as chairman of the board; Peter W. Melhuish, Sr., was appointed treasurer; James D. Kuhn, was appointed assistant treasurer; and Neva T. Campbell, was elected secretary.

United Way provides funding for more than 180 local human service programs in Clackamas, Multnomah and Washington counties in Oregon and Clark County, Washington.
