Mark Holman was recruited by the League for Unisys Corp. Holman first learned of the League's services at a job fair in Northeast Portland.

Get the training and support you need to find a good job.

Perhaps your last job was cut in company downsizing. Or you can't seem to get the training you need for the job you really want. Or maybe you're new to town. That's when you need to take advantage of every available opportunity.

The Employment Services Department of the Urban League of Portland helps people find jobs.

Hundreds of people of color, women and others have taken advantage of the League's services to find employment in the Portland metro area. Some of these services include referrals and recruitments, basic and occupational skills training, and workshops in interviewing, resume writing and job retention. In addition, annual job fairs bring in dozens of employers with current job openings, attracting thousands of potential recruits.

The League's Employment Services Department serves a wide range of individuals, from those having previous education and job credentials to those in need of new skills to help them succeed in today's work force.

For more information, call 280-2630.

Through the League's Summer Youth Employment Program, inner-city youth are paid to do free yard work for low-income seniors. The program is entirely funded by local companies.
