Career choices made with internet ease

With college graduations just around the corner, Dell Computer Corporation has a message to the future workforce — save yourself time and money — apply online to Dell which is now easier and more enjoyable than ever.

Innovation, creativity and fun are the focus of Dell's new interactive online career center, dubbed "great2b@dell."

The online site is designed to be one of the most fun, informative corporate recruitment sites available in the high technology industry.

Don't know what you want to do after college? Take the brief job questionnaire to help point you in the right direction.

Not sure corporate life is for you? Take a look at "A Day in the Life" and listen to employees talk about what it is like to work at Dell.

The "great2b@dell" site helps potential applicants find snappy, easy-to-read information about Dell.

The site has several leading-edge features, such as online audio and video interviews with employees.

Applicants can browse current job openings, use the "Resume Builder" and submit a resume online to Dell.

The site also contains information regarding Dell's corporate philosophy, benefits, current job openings, an overview of the central Texas lifestyle, general job hunting and interview tips and much more.

Dell Computer Corporation has grown quickly during the past few years.

From fiscal year 1995 to 1996, the number of Dell employees grew more than 24 percent worldwide. To continue hiring at that pace requires development of innovative solutions to make it easier to apply.

Training Consortium Formed

This spring, Oregon funders of training and technical assistance for nonprofit community development organizations formed the Oregon Community Development Training Consortium (OCDTC). Likely the first of its kind in the nation, this unique Consortium will invest more than $200,000 in training and technical assistance in the 1997-98 fiscal year to bolster the capacity of community-based organizations that seek to develop or revitalize low-income communities through affordable housing and economic development programs.

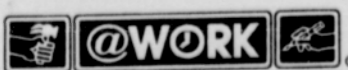

The Consortium is a public-private collaboration convened by The Neighborhood Partnership Fund of the Oregon Community Foundation. The Consortium's other private funders are the Housing for Oregon Affordable Housing (NOAH), a consortium of Oregon banks.

"Through the website, Dell wants to ensure that Dell is not only a great employer, but a preferred employer—a place where people want to work," said John Cone, vice president, Dell University and College Recruiting.

Recruiting for qualified technically-oriented employees is greater than ever, and the Internet is becoming an increasingly popular job search medium.

In 1996, more than 4,000 resumes were submitted online to Dell; and the number is growing larger.

Every day more people use the Internet to look for work and thousands of college students enter the workforce.

The website is located on Dell's worldwide home page, www.dell.com in the "About Dell" listing under the careers section or www.dell.com/great2b@dell.

A Fortune 500 company, Dell Computer Corporation has more than 11,700 employees worldwide.

The company is the world's leading direct computer systems company, based on revenues of $8.7 billion for the past four quarters.

Dell designs and customizes products and services to end-user requirements, and offers an extensive selection of peripherals and software through the DellWare program.
