A Season For Nonviolence

Martin Luther King's legacy still remains.

What began as a simple boycott has become a foundation for the shaping of the vision for the future. The movement has carried itself around the world.

Several decades after the Human Rights movement, physical and passive violence has reached critical mass in our society: shootings by school children, discriminatory law practices, downsizing, media misrepresentation, disregard for the environment, widespread addiction and other violations. Our society seeks to restructure a new human rights agenda in preparation for the new millennium that allows us to co-exist peacefully as a global community. Please join us in the struggle to practice nonviolence for a season.
