PORTLAND, OREGON GREEN CORPS PROJECT

Look for butterflies in gardens this summer near Boise-Eliot school in North Portland thanks in part to new shrubs and flowers recently planted on school grounds.

The Butterflies Aren't Free project is another example of the diversity of Pacific Power's Green Corps program started four years ago as an environmental partnership between the company and the community.

Children at Boise-Eliot School joined with the National Wildlife Federation, Dannon Yogurt and Pacific Power to design and create a butterfly garden at the school. It will be an outdoor laboratory incorporated into a schoolyard wildlife habitat. About 40 sixth and seventh grade students worked with a landscape architect on the project along with 15 Pacific Power volunteers.

The butterfly garden won Pacific Power's Green Glove award, created this year to honor the Green Corps project demonstrating the most creativity and best coordination with community groups.
