At year's end, Davenport counts her net gains

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Lindsay Davenport prefers to leave the spotlight to others. All she does is win. "If people want to think I'm boring, that's fine," Davenport said. "It's not going to change if I'm ranked two or one or three in the world," she said. "It's not going to change my enjoyment. That's the way it is." She won tournaments the last two weeks of the season, including the $2 million Chase Championships of the WTA Tour on Sunday, the year-closing, 16-player event at Madison Square Garden. "I'm just a pretty quiet person and don't want a lot of fanfare anyway," said Davenport.

She has beaten Martina Hingis all three times they played in 1999, including the finals the last two Sundays. For winning the Chase, Davenport received the Billie Jean King Trophy and $500,000. "That was like her best match against me," said Hingis, who remains No. 1. "I didn't really have that many opportunities because she served very well and even the groundstrokes were just very deep and it's hard to do something out of them." Against Hingis—a master at changing speeds, directions and tactics—Davenport used her power to control the points. She would pound her serve or boom groundstrokes. "I'm going to make errors in my game at some points in matches because I go for it a lot," Davenport said.
