Roots of Ancient Mysticism and Modern Psychology

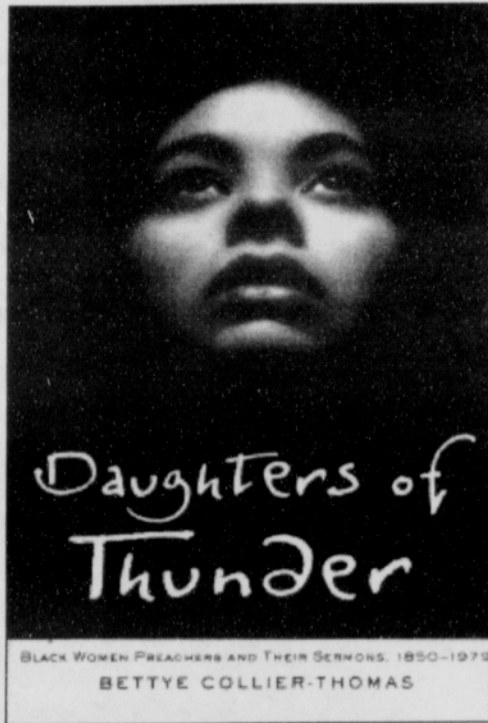

By Edward Bruce Bynum
Teachers College Press; 1999

In this bold, humanistic view of history, archaeology, genetics, and the biospiritual roots of religion and science, Edward Bruce Bynum offers a radically new vision of the collective unconscious in its daily and historical operations. He goes beyond traditional "Eastern" and "Western" perspectives and presents a powerful African vision of the human species from our earliest days to contemporary times. This brilliant and provocative synthesis of both modern and ancient science and the great enduring spiritual traditions provides a vision for the new millennium.

Black Women Preachers and their Sermons, 1850-1979

By Bettye Collier-Thomas
Jossey Bass; 1998

Daughters of Thunder brings together the voices of fourteen black women preachers along with historical and biographical information that places them in the context of their times. Spanning the days of slavery on through the long struggle to gain the most basic of civil rights, these remarkable women delivered messages of hope and faith that cut to the heart and moved their followers. The women represented here include figures known to scholars and women who have gone unnoticed despite their great impact. Encompassing themes ranging from racial and gender discrimination in the church and society to the tenets of their shared theology, their sermons reveal women of great faith, courage, and wisdom.
