Request for Qualification #00-10 City of Portland, Oregon PORTLAND DEVELOPMENT COMMISSION Urban Design Team Rose Quarter Design and Development Project May 19, 2000

The Portland Development Commission is seeking an urban design team ("Team") to participate in a PDC-funded project that will direct future development in the Rose Quarter District of Portland's Central City. The urban design component of the project is the most critical and the successful respondent will play a central role in determining the future of the District.

The Rose Quarter District is the location for the Rose Garden Arena, Memorial Coliseum, Oregon Convention Center and Rose Quarter Transit Center. The Oregon Convention Center opened in 1990. The Rose Garden Arena complex opened in 1994. No other significant development has occurred within the area since that time. Several of the development sites and retail spaces within the area are underutilized or vacant. There are two other major ownerships in the district: the Dreyfus Company which owns and operates a major grain facility and the Portland School District which owns an office/warehouse complex and several acres of surface parking. There are approximately ten other ownerships, all under one-acre, within the project area.

The Rose Quarter Design and Development Project will create an urban design plan that suggest what uses are appropriate, where development should occur and how mobility and access to the District can be assured. The project will also produce a development strategy that identifies specific private and public actions needed to achieve the desired urban design.

This Request for Qualifications is for urban design services only. Other project components such as real estate market analysis and transportation planning will be selected through a separate process. The overall project will be managed by David Knowles of Shiels Obletz Johnsen.

The full Request for Qualification may be obtained by telephone to:
