The new school and the old school of golf

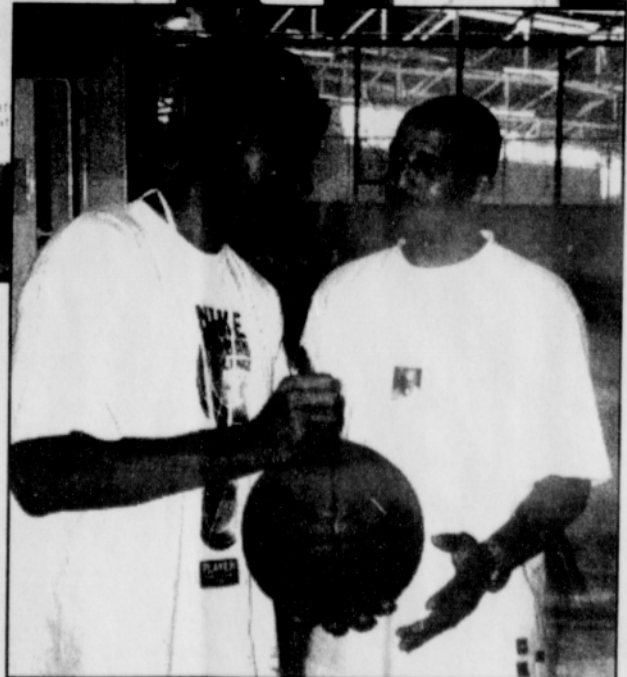

Both schools find Portland a worthy stop to support and educate the youth engaged in learning the art of golf. In June 2000, Tiger Woods stopped in Portland to share some tips with the Portland Youth Golf Association headed by pro golfer Robert Clark. This week, August 8 through the 12, Charlie Sifford will be stopping in to challenge the young golfers, participating in the OAME, PGYA Golf Tournament at Heron Lakes Golf Course in here in Portland on August 10, and 11.

Beaverton hosts Nike challenge

The 2000 Nike Global Challenge men's high school basketball tournament was held in Portland, Oregon at the Tualatin Parks and Rec Center. Some of the top talent in the world played at the event. Most of these players will be playing for major Division I powers next season and some may even be playing in the NBA. The Nike Global Challenge, hosted an elite 16-team international basketball tournament, and pitted 10 international teams and six U.S. high school travel teams in four days of pool play. The tournament matched four pools of four teams with play-off games determining a 16-slot bracket. Each team played a minimum of 6 games. Sanctioned by USAB, the Nike Global Challenge offered U.S. student-athletes the unique opportunity to compete with their peers from across the globe. The Houston Hoops out of Houston, Texas prevailed with a (3) point desperation shot at the buzzer to win it all 73-72. Grant frustrates Trail Blazers again

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Trail Blazers' front office unleashed its frustration with free agent Brian Grant on Monday, while Grant's agent said he wondered what all the fuss was about. A high-level source with the Blazers said Grant had just rejected a six-year, $70 million contract offer to return to the team. "He does not want to be in Portland," the source said. "We have reached our limit. . . . To us, this is a slap in the face." Mark Bartelstein, who represents Grant, took issue with that. "As far as these reports that Brian said, 'Get lost,' or anything like that, nothing could be further from the truth," Bartelstein said. "We don't deal in ultimatums, and they haven't done that. . . . This is far from acrimonious." The shouting match seemed to make one thing clear: If the Blazers and Grant want each other anymore, they must patch things up quickly. And the Blazers probably would have to raise their offer again, moving closer or all the way to the seven-year, $93 million deal that is the best available to Grant under NBA rules. Otherwise, Grant either will continue trying to negotiate a sign-and-trade deal, preferably one that would move him to Miami or New York, or leave the Blazers empty-handed by signing for $2.25 million next season with Miami. A three-way trade, with Grant going to the Heat or Knicks and the Blazers getting Cleveland's Shawn Kemp, still is possible. Grant visited the Heat last week on his way to a vacation in Jamaica.
