standards of ritual music he learned from his father, a Wonche Priest, and the flashy international pop music he performed as a young professional with big bands in Accra.

After moving away from the nightclub circuit, Addy joined the National Arts of Ghana, becoming a master in the traditional music and dance of the many cultures of the country.

Addy's contemporary band KUKRUDU, which is Ga for earthquake, is an ensemble of African and American musicians that performs a rich synthesis of musical styles on Ghanaian percussion and Western instruments including saxophone, trumpet, keyboard, electric bass and drum kit.
