emerged as one of the most prestigious alternative schools in the state.

Begun in 1967 and (under the dynamic leadership of Rosemary Anderson) accredited by the Northwest Association of schools and Colleges in 1989, POIC/RAMHS operates daily classes and job skill programs for high-risk youth. The curriculum has flourished the past 10 years under the tutelage of Dr. Samuel E. Kelly.

While serving as a Captain in the United States Army, Dr. Kelly received his first degree in history from West Virginia State College in 1959. He went on to earn a master's degree, also in history, from Marshal University in 1960, and returned to West Virginia State College for his bachelor's degree in education in 1962.

After retiring from the army as a Colonel with 22 years of service, he earned the opportunity to join the University of Washington in 1969 as the founding vice president of the office for minority affairs, where he raised membership from 430 to over 4,000 students.

He received his doctorate in higher education administration and history from University of Washington in 1971. Following this retirement in 1982, he was designated professor emeritus by the University of Washington president and faculty.

A powerful community presence and African-American spokesman, Dr. Kelly remarks, "When people ask why a man with my education would work at a small, accredited, alternative high school, I tell them this is not, just about my contribution to the community, this is my life's work."
