For the first time an African American commander is leading Oregon fighter pilots in defense of Pacific Northwest airspace and into the battle against terrorism.

Col. Garry C. Dean is in charge of the 142nd Fighter Wing of the Oregon Air National Guard, stationed at the Portland Air National Guard Base.

Dean took full charge of the unit on Jan. 21. He is the first African American to hold the position as wing commander. He leads more than 1,000 military personnel and 18 F-15 jet fighters.

The wing was recently called to duty as part of the Pentagon's massive call up of reservists in the wake of the Sept. 11 attacks on the World Trade Center in New York and Pentagon near Washington, D.C.

Because of the heightened national security concerns and top secret destinations for the guardsmen called-up, Dean could not be interviewed for this story, according to National Guard spokesman Misti Oyler.

As a traditional guardsman, Dean is employed in civilian life as a pilot for Delta Airlines.

He has more than 4,000 hours flying military aircraft; 2,500 of which are in the F-15.

Dean lived most of his younger life as an Army "brat" near Ft. Bliss Texas. He was commissioned in May 1978

State Rep. Jackie Dingfelder, D-Northeast Portland, gave a lesson in democracy to students at Fernwood Middle School Friday.

The visit to the northeast Portland school was part of Back to School Week sponsored by the National Conference of State Legislatures, a bipartisan event designed to teach young people what it's like to be a lawmaker, the legislative process, and why citizen involvement is needed in our society.

"It's important to educate our kids about the political process at an early age," Dingfelder said. "We need to help them understand that civic involvement is essential in our system of representative democracy."

Last year, more than 2,500 legislators across the country met with students in all grade levels, participating in exercises that helped build an understanding of civic involvement and the legislative process.

Dingfelder was a guest of Tom Streckert's 8th grade social studies class.

In addition to explaining Oregon's legislative process and stressing the importance of citizens involvement, she led the class in a mock legislative exercise to emphasize the cooperation and consensus building that is necessary in formulating fair and just outcomes.

Students assumed the roles of assembly leaders, committee chairs and at-large members of a legislative body. They steered a bill through hearings, and adopted an amended version of the law that was agreeable to most of the members.

"They were a bright and thoughtful group of kids," Dingfelder said. "I feel secure in knowing that some of them will be our future leaders."

Freightliner Closings Whispered

(AP)—Freightliner, the heavy truck subsidiary of DaimlerChrysler, expects to lose a record $1.2 billion this year, possibly forcing the closure of two plants at the truck maker's headquarters in north Portland.

Stark's News Service Interactive is reporting that Freightliner executives predicted the losses last week in separate meetings with state and local officials, and with union representatives.

The news service, citing company sources, says Freightliner lost more than $520 million during the first half of this year.

Stark's also says nearly a third of Freightliner's dealers are facing possible bankruptcy during an economic downturn that has worsened since the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

Freightliner spokesman Chris Brandt said Monday that DaimlerChrysler doesn't release separate figures for its subsidiary.

He declined to comment on reports of possible closures, but he confirmed that Freightliner met with Governor Kitzhaber and Mayor Vera Katz.
