

Barbecue Supports Urban League

Area residents are encouraged to show support for the Urban League of Portland by enjoying a barbecued turkey burger or grilled portabella mushroom burger at any of the New Seasons Markets in the Portland area, including the Concordia store at 5320 N.E. 33rd Ave. and Sellwood store at 1214 S.E. Tacoma.

All proceeds will go to support the Urban League of Portland.

For $5, customers can choose from a delicious, free-range turkey burger donated by Diestel Family Ranch of Sonoma, Calif., or a grilled portabella mushroom burger. Both will be served with all the fixings on a New Seasons Market organic rosemary garlic roll, accompanied by chips and a soda.

The Urban League of Portland advocates for all people who seek economic justice and social equality. Whether through its senior center, educational programs for youth, community health programs or advocacy efforts, the Urban League is a positive agent for social change in the community.

Carter to Leave Urban League Post

State Sen. Margaret Carter

State Sen. Margaret Carter announced last week that she will leave her position as President of the Urban League of Portland this coming October.

"It has been a joy and a privilege to lead the Urban League for the last two and a half years,"

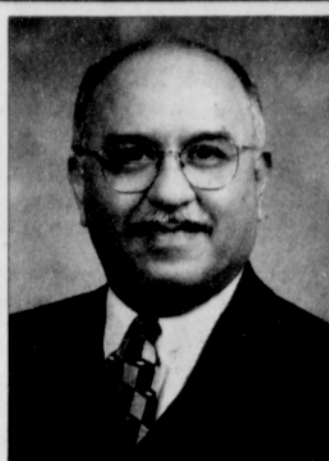

Carter said. "Now the league is in the position to move forward in creative, new directions and it is the perfect time for a new leadership to take us to the next level."

Carter was named acting president of the Urban League in November 1999 and was appointed to the position permanently six months later.

Baruti L. Artharee, chairman of the local Urban League's board of directors, said the board accepted Carter's resignation "with reluctance and with great appreciation for the wonderful job she had done."

Artharee said the board would begin a process in the near future to hire a new president.

Jesus "Jess" Carreon

Portland Community College President Jesus "Jess" Carreon is moving up on a national board for community colleges.

Carreon has been selected chair-elect of the American Association of Community Colleges board. He will assume the position July 1 and will become chair of the national board July 1, 2003.

PCC President Moves Up National Board

Before assuming the presidency at PCC last year, Carreon was superintendent/president of the Rio Hondo Community College District and president of Ventura College, both in California. Prior to focusing on his career in education, he managed a family-owned construction business.

Carreon, a resident of Lake Oswego, has extensive experience, both as an educator and in the private sector. He received his associate's degree from Grossmont College in San Diego, and then completed his bachelor's degree at San Diego State and a master's degree from the University of California, Irvine. He earned his doctoral degree in education from the University of Southern California.

The American Association of Community Colleges represents more than 1,100 community, junior, and technical colleges nationwide.

"For more than 100 years, community and technical colleges, 'America's colleges,' have supported millions of people transferring to the four-year schools to attain their BA and beyond," Carreon said. "In the last century, community colleges were central to America's economic vitality. In the 21st century, America's community colleges will be key to educating and training a globally competitive workforce. It is our destiny," he said.

Camp Welcomes Minority Youth

The office of diversity and multicultural affairs at Oregon Health & Science University is taking applications for a summer camp geared to minority and disadvantaged middle school students interested in health and science professions. Called Your Opportunity in Science (YO Science), the camp is scheduled July 15-19.

Up to 15 students will be enrolled in the program at no cost.

The deadline for receipt of applications is June 14. Application forms and instructions are available from middle school counselors and teachers. You may also contact the Office of Diversity and Multicultural Affairs at 503-494-5657 to request the application packet or download the forms at the OHSU website: www.ohsu.edu/diversity/yoscience.html.

Abortion Activists Lose Portland Case

(AP) — A federal appeals court, reversing its own decision, has ruled that anti-abortion activists who created Wild West-style posters and a Web site targeting abortion doctors are liable because their works were illegal threats and not free speech.

But the sharply divided 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, while calling the works "a true threat," ordered a federal judge in Portland to reduce the $108.5 million in punitive damages a jury awarded to four abortion doctors and two clinics who sued a dozen abortion foes.

The 6-5 ruling Thursday reverses the circuit's March 2001 decision in the case and upholds a 1994 federal law that makes it illegal to incite violence and threaten abortion doctors.

"I think it says for the abortion and non-abortion community, if you threaten to kill somebody, the law is not going to protect you and the First Amendment is not going to protect you," said Maria Vullo, an attorney for Planned Parenthood.

Planned Parenthood, an abortion provider, and the doctors were portrayed on Old West-style "wanted" posters passed out at rallies and on a Web site called the "Nuremberg Files," which listed abortion providers' names and addresses and declared them guilty of crimes against humanity.

A federal judge and the Portland jury found in 1999 that the Web site and some of the posters were "true threats to kill" because the abortion doctors were being tormented and three of them murdered. Once killed, their names were crossed off the list on the Web site.
