Food Mart Loses Liquor License

Store employees accused of making illegal drug sales

The Oregon Liquor Control Commission has ordered an immediate suspension of liquor sales at the Dekum Food Market, 800 N.E. Dekum, after store employees were allegedly caught selling drugs on the premises.

Officials said the immediate suspension was issued last Wednesday because the business is considered a serious danger to public health and safety.

The store's licensees, Seung K. Kim and Hack H. Kim were ordered to stop selling packaged beer and wine at the facility until further notice.

"The premises has become a haven for illegal drug activity," the OLCC suspension order to the store operators said. "The multiple purchases/deliveries of illegal drugs on your licensed premises, combined with the illegal drugs found on the licensed premises are evidence of the criminal enterprise operating from your store."

The OLCC charged that unlawful activity occurred at least four times between August and October when two employees sold marijuana at the store to police undercover personnel.

In addition, the commission said one of the store's employees had five plastic bags of marijuana and two rocks of cocaine on the premises.

OLCC Director Pamela S. Erickson said illegal drug activity has a high potential to cause public health and safety problems that are compounded when alcohol is involved. She said illegal drug trafficking poses a serious danger because of the threat of violence associated with it. The market has the right to an administrative hearing on the suspension and must notify the OLCC of their intention to seek a hearing by Jan. 21.

Firefighting Jobs Draw 2,832 Applicants

A written test will be held Nov. 5 at the Oregon Convention Center for hundreds of people who met the most recent deadline to apply for 60 firefighting positions in the city.

Portland Fire and Rescue

spokesperson Neil Heesacker said 2,832 applicants have signed up for consideration as a firefighter trainee and firefighter emergency medical technician/paramedic.

The 60 positions will become available in the next two years based on retirements, promotions and other changes in the fire bureau.

Two years ago, when the last firefighter's test was given, 1,760 applicants took the written test.
