Kenny Lattimore and Chanté Moore are touring the country with performances of their play 'Things That Lovers Do' and an album of the same name. The newlyweds are expecting their first child.

'Lovers Do' Keeps Lovers Together

Singers Kenny Lattimore and Chanté Moore promote album, play

(AP)—Singers Kenny Lattimore and Chanté Moore have built their careers on songs about romance. Now the husband-and-wife team has joined forces to explore "Things That Lovers Do" through an album and a play with that title.

The couple, who have been married a little more than a year, have recorded an album composed mainly of classic R&B duets, and the play, directed by Tony Award-winner George Faison, includes all the album's songs plus some of their signature tunes.

Lattimore says he's excited because this is the first time an R&B act has used starring roles in a play to launch a new album, though several acts have worked their hits into stage productions.

Lattimore and Moore say the play, which tells the story of two singers destined for one another but dealing with twists and turns along the way, has some personal touches but shouldn't be construed as their life stories. It has, however, allowed them to stay together while they count down to the delivery of their first child together in April.

"A lot of couples in the industry know music takes you away from one another," Moore says. "The fact that we get to do this together is really great because it bonds our family together."

The play is now in Atlanta and will stop in several cities before winding up in Chicago. After that, the couple plans to take time to have the baby, then possibly do a concert tour in late summer and a West Coast swing with the play in the fall.
