New Spin on PE

Teachers from Portland Public Schools learned how bean bags, hula hoops, parachutes and hip-hop music will make their students move.

Physical education instructors are being trained in a new P.E. designed to teach students the joy of movement, teamwork and learning new skills.

Instructors learned the PE2GO curriculum, sponsored by Nike and SPARKS (Sports, Play and Active Recreation for Kids), at Vestal Elementary School in northeast Portland last Thursday.

The pilot program aims to increase the quality and quantity of physical education in schools with programs that have been battered by budget cuts.

Wallace Slams NBA Owners

Forward says league exploits young players

Rasheed Wallace

(AP) - Portland Trail Blazer Rasheed Wallace issued an apology Saturday saying he was sorry if his language and comments offended anyone in a recent interview.

The NBA forward didn't hold the league in high regard in the article published last week in The Oregonian.

Wallace said league's white establishment is exploiting young black athletes to enrich itself.

"I ain't no dumb-ass nigger out here. I'm not like a whole bunch of these young boys out here who get caught up and captivated into the league," Wallace, 29, said. "No. I see behind the lines. I see behind the false screens. I know what this business is all about. I know the commissioner of this league makes more than three-quarters of the players in this league."

Wallace added that teams are drafting high school players because they want athletes who are "dumb and dumber."

"That's why they're drafting all these high school cats, because they come into the league and they don't know no better. They don't know no better, and they don't know the real business, and they don't see behind the charade."

If I feel as though myself or my teammates have been dealt a wrong hand, I'm going to let it be known.

Wallace also said he's not concerned with NBA officials, who whistled him for a record 41 technical fouls in 2000-01.

"That's just the fire in me. Some of the technicals I deserved. Cussing at the officials or throwing something," he said. "But some of them I didn't deserve."

"I'm not scared of the NBA. I'm not scared of the NBA officials. If I feel as though myself or my teammates have been dealt a wrong hand, I'm going to let it be known. I'm not going to sit up here like most of these cats and bite my tongue. That's not me."

Wallace is in his eighth season with Portland and is making $17 million this season. He is the only Blazers player who lives in the area throughout the year, not just during the NBA season. Wallace said he and his wife of five years, Fatima, like the city and would prefer to stay.

Wallace said his wife helped him realize that some of his actions can have a negative effect on their family, such as when he was arrested and charged with marijuana possession in November 2002 while riding in a sport utility vehicle with guard Damon Stoudamire.

Wallace says he didn't regret the incident initially. Then he heard from his wife.

"It was embarrassing from the standpoint of my family. That's one of the things my wife made me realize. She was like, 'I know how you are. I know stuff like that doesn't really affect you too much. But it affected us,'" Wallace said. "She meant her and my kids. That made me sit back and think about it, and she was right. A situation like that, I have to think past myself. I got a family. Got a wife. She was telling me what was happening with my kids. After I talked to her about it, I regretted the whole situation."

LeBron James Makes 'Fascinating' List

LeBron James

(AP) - Barbara Walters made LeBron James a top pick again.

The Cleveland Cavaliers' rookie guard has been named one of the "The 10 Most Fascinating People of 2003" for Walters' upcoming network TV special.

James was the No. 1 overall pick in the NBA draft last June.

The 18-year-old James said he was surprised to make the list, which includes California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton, Nicole Kidman and lifestyle maven Martha Stewart.

"I don't know who votes on something like that," James said.

James' interview with Walters will air on Wednesday, Dec. 17 at 9 p.m. on ABC.
