Learning from World Class Choreographers

Jefferson Dancers Artistic Director Steve Gonzalez is lending his support to an inaugural Northwest Professional Dance Project, July 26 to Aug. 13, for students of classical dance.

The event will bring together an esteemed collection of world-class, contemporary dance makers from across North America including Alonzo King, Donald Byrd, Gérard Théorêt, Shawn Hounsell and Davis Robertson, as well as Portland's own dance community artists Sarah Slipper, Mary Oslund and Minh Tran, and representatives from Oregon Ballet Theatre and BodyVox.

The project is an exclusive, three-week summer dance offering for young professionals and advanced dance students ages 16 to 25, giving them the opportunity to study and work with leading dance makers and companies on innovative choreography.

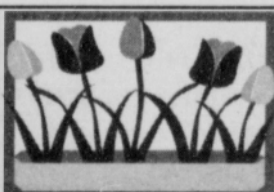

The culmination of the project will include a public showing of the works-in-progress at Lincoln Hall on the Portland State University campus Aug. 13. Following the performance, there will be a discussion period with artists, dancers and audience.

Enrollment in the project is limited to emphasize individualized instruction, coaching and mentoring. Admittance will be based on application materials, recommendation by a director or faculty member and/or audition.
