Arrest Made in 1970 Cop Slaying

(AP) — A man described by the Los Angeles Times as a former low-level associate of the Black Panthers has been arrested in connection with a Berkeley police officer's 1970 slaying that police at the time called a political assassination.

Don Juan Warren Graphenreed, 55, is charged with suspicion of murder and conspiracy to commit murder in the killing of Officer Ronald Tsukamoto.

In a statement, Berkeley police said Graphenreed "did not act alone and is only one of several suspects."

The San Francisco Chronicle quoted unidentified sources as saying the shooting was intended to raise the suspect's stature in a black organization that advocated violence against police.

Tsukamoto, 28, had stopped a motorcyclist for a traffic violation. As the officer talked with the motorcyclist, another man approached, exchanged a few words, then fired two shots from a pistol — one hitting Tsukamoto in the eye.

At the time, the killing was the third targeting an officer in the San Francisco Bay area within a two-month span. Bruce Baker, then Berkeley's police chief, called it an "assassination."

He was wearing a white baseball cap with an Adidas logo on the front, a black leather jacket, a light blue shirt and dark pants. He was armed with a chrome-colored pistol.

A video security camera captures a suspect in the robbery of the C&L Market on Northeast Sandy Boulevard.
