Teen Volunteers Promote Wellness

Goblin Safety Alert

Little goblins and princesses can play it safe on Halloween with reflective trick-or-treat bags from Providence Health Systems Hospitals.

The bags include safety tips, such as staying with an adult or in a large group at all times and remaining in well-lit areas when gathering Halloween treats.

Families may pick up one free bag per child at Providence medical centers in Portland and Milwaukie, including the main hospital lobby and emergency department at Providence Portland Medical Center, 4805 N.E. Glisan St., through Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m.

← Halloween is not lost on Grace Pitts who roots through a Halloween bag for treats while a patient in the Children's Care unit at Providence St. Vincent Medical Center. The hospital is promoting safety by giving kids the free reflective trick-or-treat bags.
