LAW & JUSTICE

Mississippi Justice Waits 40 Years

Klansman charged in murders of civil rights workers

(AP) — Reputed Ku Klux Klan member Edgar Ray Killen pleaded "not guilty" three times Friday as he was arraigned on murder charges in the slayings of three civil rights workers more than 40 years ago.

Killen, 79, was arrested Thursday in the 1964 shooting deaths James Chaney, a 21-year-old black Mississippian, and two white New Yorkers, Andrew Goodman, 20, and Michael Schwerner, 24. It was the first time the state has sought criminal charges in the case that outraged a nation.

Rep. John Lewis, the black Georgia congressman who knew the three slain men, hailed the arrest Friday, telling NBC's "Today" that it was "a tremendous step down a very long road."

In 1967, the Justice Department tried Killen and 18 other men - many of them also Klan members - on federal civil rights violations. Seven Edgar Ray Killen faces a judge during his arraignment Friday on murder charges in the deaths of three civil rights workers, 40 years after their deaths.

It is never, ever too late to bring about justice and send the strongest possible message that bigotry and hate will not be tolerated in our society.

- Civil rights leader and U.S. Rep. John Lewis were convicted and sentenced to prison terms ranging from three to 10 years. Killen was freed after his trial ended in a hung jury.

From her home in New York, Goodman's mother, Carolyn, said she "knew that in the end the right thing was going to happen." She added: "I'm not looking for revenge. I'm looking for justice."

Lewis, elected to Congress from Georgia in 1986, was chairman of a leading civil right group, the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, from 1963 to 1966.

"It is never, ever too late to bring about justice and send the strongest possible message that bigotry and hate will not be tolerated in our society," he said Friday.

Killen's arrest followed a grand jury session that apparently included testimony from individuals believed to have knowledge of the slayings.

Chaney, Goodman and Schwerner, were killed on a lonely dirt road as they drove to a church to investigate a fire. The trio allegedly was stopped by Klansmen, beaten and shot to death.

They were participating in Freedom Summer 1964, when hundreds of young, mostly white, college students came to the South to register blacks to vote and start educational programs.

Several weeks later, their bodies were found buried in a dam a few miles from the church. The case was dramatized in the 1988 movie "Mississippi Burning."

Killen has always denied a role in the slayings.

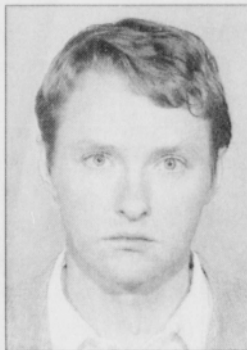

Mississippi has had some success reopening old civil rights murder cases, including a 1994 conviction of Byron de la Beckwith for the 1963 assassination of NAACP field secretary Medgar Evers.

Offender Accused of Luring Children

A local radio station employee has been accused of using his job to lure minors into sexual encounters.

David Edison Neel, 28, faces charges of rape, sex abuse and contributing to the sexual delinquency of a minor, related to a Nov. 9 incident at Oaks Park.

Detectives believe that Neel, a registered sex offender, may have used his job at radio station KVMX "The Mix 107.5" to gain access to minors. There is no evidence that members of the station or the park had any knowledge of the illegal activities.

Anyone with information is asked to call the Sexual Assault Detail of the Portland Police Bureau Detective Division at 503-823-0422.

Texas Cop's Perjury Trial Begins

(AP) — A pool of 101 prospective jurors in Lubbock, Texas began answering a judge's questions Monday in the perjury trial of a former police officer whose discredited drug busts put dozens of black people in prison. Tom Coleman could face up to 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine on each of three felony charges of aggravated perjury. The trial centers on whether Coleman lied about his own arrest record during evidentiary hearings for some of the defendants in 2003.
