Courteous Driver

This makes riding a bike a very defensive act. Often when I roll up to a stop sign, the driver with the right of way will wait, presumably for me to go first. Once again, I know better than to assume this driver is being nice. So I wait obstinately or wave them on until they decide to go. It's an awkward moment, but even if I trust the person behind the wheel, I can't trust their two-ton machine.

I wish I could tell these drivers, "I appreciate your good manners, but to prevent getting run over, I'm going to play it by the book."
