wants to help educate the community about the value of a good diet. He says it's a disease that affects African Americans at a higher rate than most.

Today, Hoggans is the co-team captain of the PCC Panthers and does his intimidating on the basketball court. Even though he never has played organized basketball before joining the team, he felt he could contribute defense and rebounding as well as provide leadership.

"My job is to be an inspiration to the team and help maximize their potential," he said.

Many people would be bitter after a stay in prison, but Hoggans isn't. Besides his big smile and positive demeanor, he is reflective about his incarceration.

"It was the best thing that ever happened to me," he said. "It got me away from the life. I just had to see all of the other inmates around me and there were the worst of the worst in there, killers and rapists. I decided pretty quickly that that wasn't what I wanted my life to be about. I didn't want to come out and be that stereotypical ex-convict."

PCC's basketball teams are composed of students throughout the district, with both teams now based at the brand new athletic complex on the Cascade Campus. The new facility offers amenities and an innovative style that will entertain this year and well into the future.

Last year, the PCC men's basketball team tied the school record for the second most wins in the program's history with 14 victories. The school record is 15 wins in a season. At one point, PCC was ranked 12th in their conference, its highest known ranking ever.

To keep up with the men's and women's basketball teams, visit the college's website pcc.edu/about/athletics.
