Interpreting the Art of Life Through Dance

Dragon Arts Studio performers present Images of China using Chinese rod puppetry, an ancient art form.

Puppetfest in Vancouver

Tears of Joy Theatre hosts Puppetfest on Saturday, April 28 from 10:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. at Firstenburg Community Center, 700 N.E. 136th Ave. in Vancouver.

The performances are free, along with some puppet-making activities for young children. A $5 workshop pass will be good for workshops teaching puppetry voice, character-building and construction.

Puppetfest will also feature an engaging lineup of performances, workshops and exhibits. Dragon Arts Studio will present "Images of China," blending music, humor, special effects and Chinese rod puppetry, an ancient art form seldom seen in the U.S.

A spectacular exhibit of antique, rare and collectible puppets will be displayed by Old World Theatre.

Based in Vancouver, Tears of Joy has served children and families for 35 years and is nationally recognized for its commitment to excellence.

Jazz Band at the Blue Monk

Brian Ward

An incredible night of jazz featuring the Brian Ward Quartet is coming to the Blue Monk, 3341 S.E. Belmont St., on Saturday, April 28 at 9 p.m.

The band features Stu Cook on drums and Al Criado on bass, and will feature Jim Pribbenow, a semi-regular on Tuesday nights at the Blue Monk. Pribbenow is one of the nation's premier saxophonists.

The quartet, a tight band that explores a lot of territory, will perform material developed from their regular gig.
