O J says 'If I Did It' Full of Errors Have you seen me?

Flaws blamed on ghost writer

O.J. Simpson says his hypothetical account of killing his ex-wife in his aborted memoir "If I Did It" was invented by a ghost writer and filled with errors that he refused to correct for fear of appearing to be guilty of the crime.

Simpson related his involvement in the book, which was scrapped shortly before its release date last year amid a torrent of public outrage, in a rare, hour long Internet interview.

After a long legal fight, rights to the book passed to the family of murder victim Ron Goldman, a friend slain along with Simpson's ex-wife at her Los Angeles home in June 1994.

that he reluctantly agreed to include a chapter containing a "night-of-the-crime" account as told by him only after the publishers promised to clearly label it as hypothetical.

"Because I didn't do it. ... I will not justify the evidence they had. It didn't work then," he said. "We got to that chapter, and I said, 'Hey, I can't participate in that."

"I read what he wrote, and I saw all of these major holes, all of these impossible things," Simpson recalled. He gave few specific examples of the discrepancies he found but said he declined to correct any of them.

"All of these other parts of the book I would correct, but I told myself, 'If I correct this, there are going to be people out there that say, 'Oh, look how accurate this is,' Right?

Simpson said he never thought the book would get published and Simpson said the book was consented to it mostly because he

Whoopi Looks Ahead to 'The View'

Says she's going to be 'me'

(AP) -- Whoopi Goldberg will bring no celebrity feuds with her when she joins "The View," at least none that she's aware of.

"Who knows?" she told The Associated Press. "Anybody could say 'I don't like her.' That's OK. I just won't come to your home.'

That already sets Goldberg apart from her predecessor. "The View," putting Rosie O'Donnell in its rearview mirror, officially Whoopi Goldberg introduced Goldberg to the the day after Labor Day. show's audience as its modera-

Lead Paint Brings Another Toy Recall

(AP) -- China said it would work with the United States to improve product safety amid a massive U.S. recall Thursday of plastic preschool toys made by a Chinese vendor, including the popular Big Bird, Elmo, Dora and Diego characters

Toy-maker Fisher-Price announced that it was recalling almost 1 million of the toys, the latest in a string of Chinese product safety scandals.

Fisher-Price and the commission issued statements saying parents should keep suspect toys away from children and contact the company.

The recall follows another high-profile move from toy maker RC2 Corp., which in June voluntarily recalled 1.5 million wooden railroad toys and set parts from its Thomas & Friends Wooden Railway product line.

The company said that the surface paint on certain toys and parts made in China between January 2005 and April 2006 contain lead, affecting 26 components and 23 retailers.

Owners of a recalled toy can exchange it for a voucher for another product of the same value. To see pictures of the recalled toys, visit service.mattel.com. For more information, call Mattel's recall hot line at 800-916-4498.
