Exhibit Opens for Rare Turtle

The Oregon Zoo has been working to save endangered western pond turtles, rearing them in a protected environment until they are big enough for release into the wild.

Now visitors can observe these rare creatures in a naturalistic setting at the zoo's new turtle exhibit, located in the Cascade Stream and Pond Building.

The exhibit recreates the turtles' natural habitat, with cliff walls resembling a mountain streambed, and stones of various sizes scattered throughout.

Now listed as an endangered species in Washington and a sensitive species in Oregon, the Western Pond Turtle was once common from Baja California

Actress Takes Seat on 'View'

Actress Sherri Shepherd was introduced Monday as the newest cast member on "The View," following last week's introduction of Whoopi Goldberg as the moderator of the daytime chat show.

Shepherd is no stranger to "The View." She was a guest host more than a dozen times, many of them this summer as she tried out for a cast slot left empty since Star Jones Reynolds left last summer.

She appears in the upcoming film "Who's Your Caddy." Her lengthy resume includes roles on "Pauly Shore Is Dead" and "The Jamie Foxx Show." She even played God once on the CBS show "Joan of Arcadia," although it's doubtful her new colleagues will give her the same voice of authority.

Creole Zydeco and Cajun music star Geno Delafosse.

French Rockin' Boogie

Geno Delafosse, the leader of a popular Zydeco band, French Rockin' Boogie, is bringing his band to Portland for a performance on Wednesday, Sept. 19 at 7:30 p.m. at the PPAA Hall, 618 S.E. Alder St.

Delafosse learned the craft from his father John Delafosse, a legend in the Zydeco and Cajun music genre, by first playing the rub board when he was just 8 years old. He went on to play drums and then the accordion, a complex instrument that's the centerpiece of any Zydeco band.

Delafosse finds inspiration in the traditional Cajun and Creole melodies, but he and his band have crafted their own rich gumbo by adding R&B, country and blues.
