Little Guy Making Strides

Samudra, the Oregon Zoo's Asian elephant calf just turned two months old, tipping the scales at 467 pounds, a gain of more than 180 pounds from his birth weight. Samudra had a rough start to life when his mother, Rose-Tu, became confused after giving birth and nearly trampled him. But she's a loving and protective mother now, zookeepers say.

Dance Party

The Buttermilk Baby Makers, yes they are as good as those particular words, are a creative music massive consisting of Sugarman, Cutmaster Queasy, Da'rel Jr., and Computer Fam.

All four members come from different backgrounds but share one unifying philosophy: nothing beats a hot, sweaty, belligerent dance party. Their on-going monthly dance party, Off the Wall, revolves around a 80s vs. 90s theme. The music selection doesn't discriminate against any genres so expect to hear everything from House to Pop. They choreograph dance odes to songs like Thriller and Poison.

The group will perform their Halloween edition on Friday Oct. 31 at 9 p.m. at Pala, 105 N.W. Third Ave. Admission is $5 before 10 p.m. and $10 after.

Cher on the Radio for Obama

Forget music. When ya hear Cher on the radio these days, it's all about politics.

The legendary songstress has been hitting the radio campaign trail for Barack Obama.

"I called radio stations in swing states like Indiana, Iowa and Florida to tell people to go out and vote," Cher said last week during an opening for Luau Restaurant in Beverly Hills. "I wanted to call the states he needs the votes in most."

Cher modestly opined that she wasn't sure if she had any power to sway the electorate, but no matter...

"I have no idea if I was able to influence listeners, but I got the message that I was supposed to get across—to vote," she says. "I really think that Obama has a chance to be the president of his time. This is a very dangerous, very sad time for America, and I really think—I wouldn't say this if I didn't think it—I really think that he's the right person for the right time."
