

Martin Luther King Jr. sits in the front of the bus during a December 1956 protest against segregation on the public bus system in Montgomery, Ala.

"I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin, but by the content of their character."

OPB Plans MLK Television Broadcast

Martin Luther King Jr. said, "If you lose hope, somehow you lose the vitality that keeps life moving. And so today I still have a dream." For many Oregonians, the inauguration of Barack Obama--the first black president of the United States--represents a new era of hopes, dreams and fears.

Obama will be sworn into office on Tuesday, Jan. 20, just one day after Martin Luther King Jr. Day. To mark the moment--and to capture the feelings of Oregonians--Oregon Public Broadcasting and its Think Out Loud program will take questions and reflections from the audience as part of a special Martin Luther King Jr. broadcast. The event is free and open to the public and will take place from 9 to 10 a.m. on Monday, Jan. 19, at the OPB studios on 7140 S.W. Macadam Ave. Doors will open at 8 a.m. and space is on a first-come, first-seated basis.

"This historic moment offers Oregonians the opportunity to reflect back on the life of Dr. King and look ahead to our future under the leadership of Barack Obama," said Eve Epstein, executive producer of Think Out Loud. "How far have we come since Dr. King shared his dream?"
