Farmers Market Proves Popular

More than four thousand community members visited the Portland Farmers Market on its opening day May 3 in north-east Portland.

The market will open each Sunday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. through Sept. 27 at the King Neighborhood Facility on Northeast Seventh Avenue next to King School Park and south of Alberta Street.

Organizers said the attendance was twice as many as expected for this time of year. In fact, there was a run on produce and the farmers ran out of product by noon.

To meet the needs of produce-loving north and north-east Portland neighbors, farmers in attendance were planning on doubling the amount they bring on future Sundays. In addition, Portland Farmers Market will be adding three or four more vegetable growers and additional fruit producers.

Commissioner Nick Fish was on hand to ring the opening bell. He welcomed the site of a community-based farmers market in a historically underserved area of the city and one of Portland's oldest and most diverse neighborhoods.

"This will be the place where families buy their fresh produce for the week, where neighbors get to know each other, and where everyone can learn something new - maybe it's a new recipe, or a cultural tradition, or maybe an opportunity for civic engagement," Fish said.

The commissioner also thanked the many farmers and artisans.

"Food is what brings us together, around the dinner table, at the community potluck, during school lunch. We all must eat to live and nourish one another. Let this be a place where we continue to nourish ourselves, our families and our community."

Big crowds fill opening day at the Portland Farmers Market at the King Neighborhood Facility next to King School Park. The Sunday market will be expanding as the growing season gets underway. Hours are each Sunday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. through Sept. 27

Bicycle Tips, Help at PSU Market

A bike booth featuring bike displays, bike inspections and biking experts will be in place each Saturday this month at the Portland Farmers Market at Portland State University, downtown.

Bicycle and market-goers will get the information and inspiration needed to tote their produce and artisan foods home on two wheels instead of four.

"Based on recent customer surveys, we estimate that about 60 percent of our regular shoppers drive to our Saturday PSU Market every week. We've organized this month-long initiative to inspire more shoppers to consider biking to the market and elsewhere around town," says Anna Curtin, education and events manager of Portland Farmers Market.

The organization hopes to reduce traffic and congestion in the area as well as demonstrate how enjoyable and easy it is to choose an earth-friendly option to visit the market.

"Our shoppers believe in supporting farmers, buying local, and planting gardens," Curtin said. "Why not encourage them to make another considered choice by biking and using car-free transportation? We want to highlight for shoppers that convenience isn't confined to the automobile."
