Dear Deanna!

My spouse is trying to force me to quit my stable job of 10 years. I've never had problems and the benefits are great. The issue is a new department secretary. I have no interest in this woman but my wife only sees her as a young, energetic woman climbing the ladder. I've done nothing to make my wife insecure and she's going crazy listening to office gossip. I'm not quitting my job and my wife still insists that I should. What do I do? --Anonymous; Jacksonville, Fla.

Dear Anonymous:

If you've had the same job and same spouse with no issues, then something has been triggered with the arrival of your new employee. If you've winked or wagged then you've given the office hens something to talk about. Office talk is 99 percent gossip with a one percent smell of truth. Your wife has an insecurity issue that started before now and this is simply an excuse. You have a choice to fix your marriage, fix your job or fix yourself.

Dear Deanna!

My fiancé cheated before we were married and I recently learned that he's still seeing the woman he cheated with. I want to get out of the relationship but feel we should go to counseling. I find it hard to forgive him because I'm scared he'll do it again. What should I do about this? --Alexandria; Washington, D.C.

Dear Alexandria:

You had your warning signs before you got married and you knew what you were getting yourself into. Most women that are in tune with their relationship know when their mate is cheating. You should seek professional counseling not only for your marriage but yourself as well. If it doesn't work you'll be able to breathe instead of sharing your spouse or walking around being scared and worrying about a man.

History is the Gift THAT KEEPS ON GIVING.

Black History Month is all about celebrating a rich heritage. As we reflect on our past and marvel at how far we've come, it's important to share with the next generation. And when it comes to spending quality time with family, Amtrak® is definitely the way to go. With service to over 500 destinations nationwide, it's a great way to share history and make history.
