N.Y. Bomb Suspect Charged

A Pakistani-born U.S. citizen was charged Tuesday with terrorism and attempting to use a weapon of mass destruction in the botched Times Square bombing. The government said he confessed to receiving explosives training in Pakistan.

Inmates Save Deputy's Life

Two jail inmates who gave first aid to a stricken sheriff's deputy are being credited with help saving his life. The Multnomah County sheriff's office said the deputy and an inmate work crew were helping a stranded motorist Friday when the deputy needed medical assistance.

Week in The Review

James Parker and Michael Smith began CPR with assistance from a 911 dispatcher and a doctor who stopped to assist.

Marshall High Plan Opposed

About 40 people piled into Lents Commons in southeast Portland Monday night to sound off on news that Marshall High School would be transformed into a focus school under Superintendent Carole Smith's plan to revamp the city's high schools. It became clear from the meeting that few attendees -- which included students, alumni, parents, teachers and residents -- support the proposed change.

Oil Leak Liability Reviewed

As calmer weather helps stave off the Gulf oil leak, the White House and Democratic lawmakers moved Tuesday to change a law that caps BP's liability at $75 million. The goal: Raise that to $10 billion.

Ash Grounds Flights Again

Iceland's clouds of volcanic ash are menacing European air traffic again, but transport chiefs insisted Tuesday they are learning from last month's crisis and won't let the hard-to-measure emissions ground their continent again.

RIGHT NOW 3/4 OF THE PLANET IS SAYING THANK YOU.

HELPING FUND RESEARCH THAT A LOCAL BUSINESS IS USING SO INDUSTRIES CAN INEXPENSIVELY CLEAN AND REUSE WASTEWATER.

Just outside of Portland, Crystal Clear Technologies is working on something big. Using nanotechnology, they've developed a system that allows large industries like coal-fired power plants to clean and reuse wastewater over and over again. This idea was funded in part by Lottery dollars targeted at research to help grow Oregon business and create a more diverse economy.
