Exhibit Explores Race, Gender

This fall, the Hoffman Gallery of Contemporary Art at Lewis & Clark College presents an exhibition investigating the work of Alison Saar, an artist known for her emotionally candid exploration of African cultural Diaspora.

Alison Saar: Bound for Glory, features the sculptures and works on paper of this important contemporary artist who uses the human body to explore racial and gender issues while engaging her audience in an ongoing dialog.

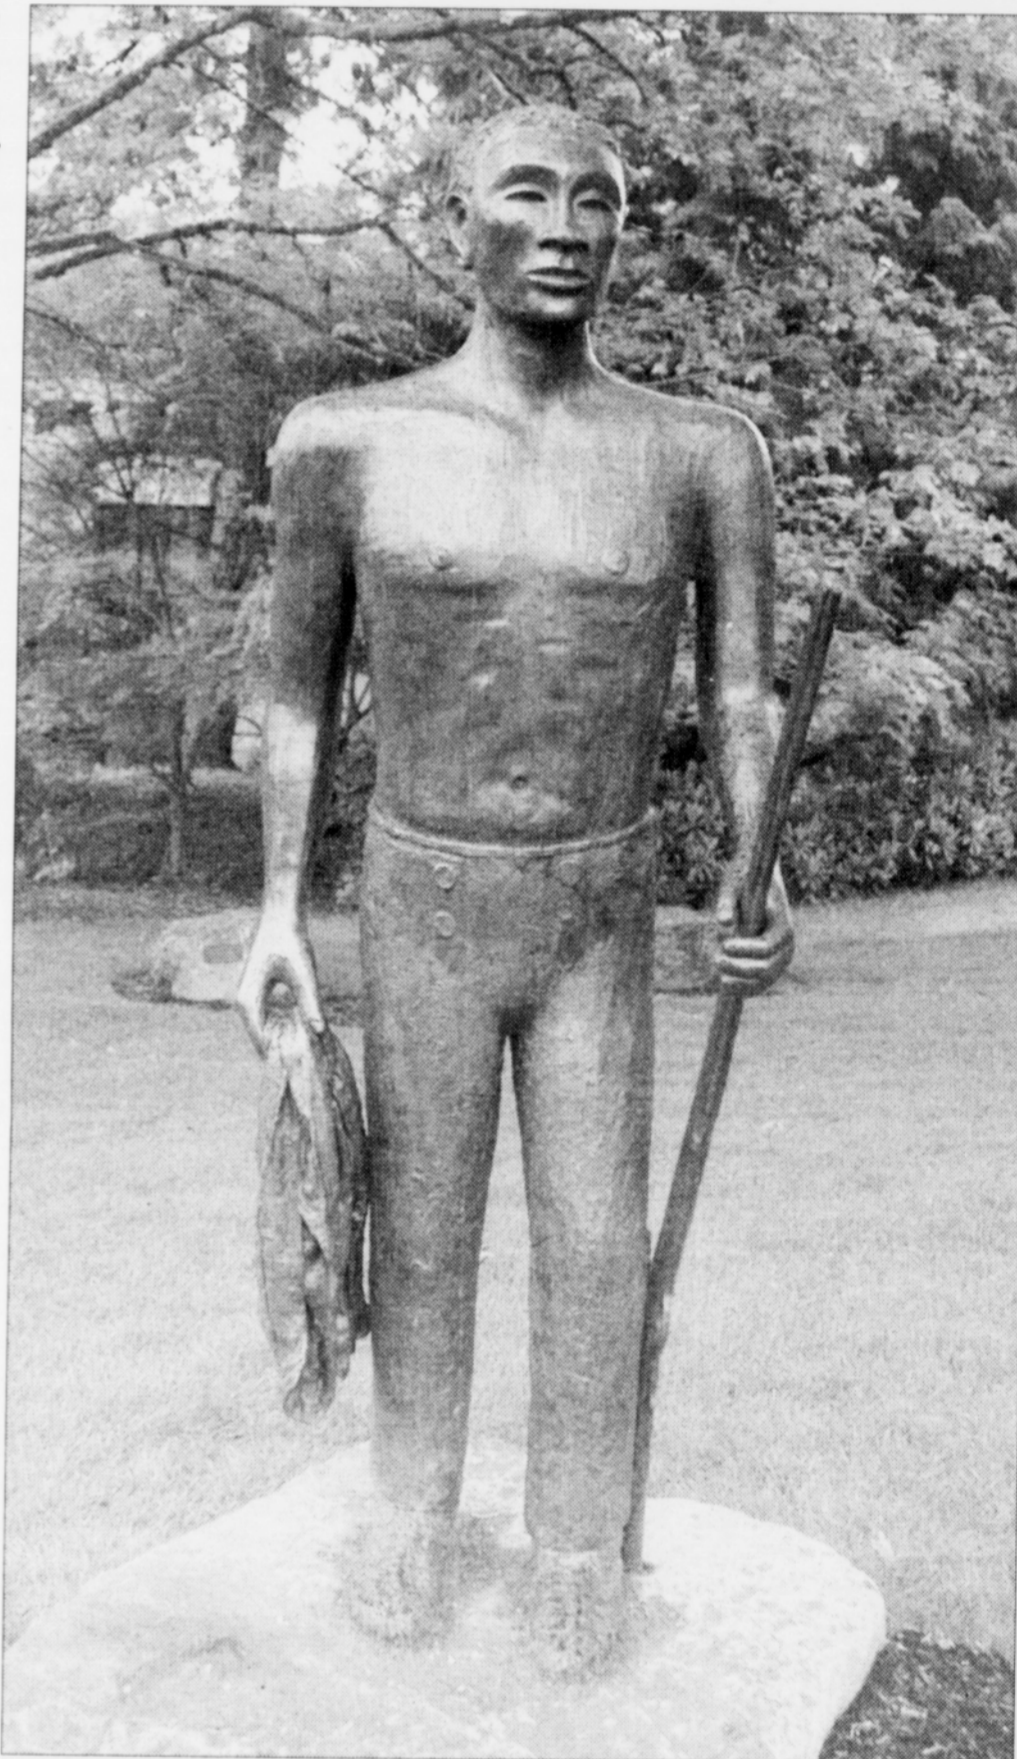

Local audiences may already be familiar with Saar's work. Last spring, Lewis & Clark held a ceremony to officially dedicate Saar's "York: Terra Incognita" bronze statue on the southwest Portland campus.

A tribute to the memory of William Clark's slave, the sculpture earned praise from the local media and has attracted visitors from the region and beyond.

The college's fall exhibition explores both Saar's public artworks and the more personal pieces she creates in her Los Angeles studio.

The exhibition opened Tuesday, Sept. 7 and will continue through Dec 12. It is free and open to the public; the gallery is open Tuesday through Sunday, 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

More information is available at lclark.edu/hoffman\_gallery.

Alison Saar's bronze sculpture of York, the African American explorer from the Lewis & Clark expedition, is a new permanent fixture on the campus of Lewis and Clark College in southwest Portland.
