last year.

Roy Kaufman, Mayor Sam Adams' spokesperson, said in an e-mail that all the applications for funding are rigorously evaluated by a panel of individuals coming from city commissioners' staff, the Oregon Youth Authority, and other government agencies.

Miller also said that there needs to be different solutions to the problem, like maybe giving tickets to sporting events in exchange for illegal weapons, which he said the Portland Trail Blazers have been good about.

"You have to be creative working with kids," he said.

As for the mayor's proposal to get guns off the street, Miller said that it could do some good, but it remains to be seen how effective it will be.

But the problem goes even deeper, according to Miller. Some kids have little attachment to society and the lack of relevance in the classroom and economic opportunities only makes matters worse, he said. He added that there needs to be more opportunities for kids to get involved in constructive activities and learn trades.

"Some kids don't feel like they are part of Portland," he said.

Miller also added that he's sponsoring an event called "Are you Tough Enough" on Sept. 25 where youth, both boys and girls, can learn about firefighting profession with hands-on activities. He can be reached at bccopn@gmail.com or at 503-933-1763.
