Photographer Retrospective

When Eve Crane walked into the A'Kasha Gallery in Beaverton with her portfolio, owner Steve Smith said he felt like he was looking at buried treasure.

Crane's stunning black-and-white images take us inside some of the 1960's most intimidating groups. She relied on her good eye, great timing and well-connected friends, like Black Panther leader Eldridge Cleaver, to tell her what was going on and where, so she could go there and take photos.

With subjects like the Hell's Angels, Huey Newton, Bobby Seals and David Hilliard, her photos reveal the heady excitement of turbulent times. Forty years later, Eve herself is the subject of a retrospective.

Reuse Art: Masks of Incognito

A group of guest artists have created masks of reclaimed materials as part of a masquerade gala fundraiser for the local recycling and reuse organization SCRAP.

Masks of Incognito represent the innovation and variety inspired by artists' use of reclaimed and recycled materials. Transforming discarded materials such as leather scraps and zippers, milk jugs and metal springs, vintage piano keys and clock parts into masks, the 25 artists have created works to transform the face and character of a mask wearer.

The masks will be on display in SCRAP's Re:Vision Gallery, 2915 N.E. Martin Luther King, Jr. Blvd. during the month of October and then auctioned at SCRAP's fundraising masquerade ball at the Oregon Zoo on Oct. 28.

Jackson Videos Coming Out

(AP) -- Michael Jackson's complete library of videos is being restored and rereleased, as well as a never-released clip for his song "One More Chance."

The "Michael Jackson's Vision" boxed set is due out on Nov. 22 and includes 4 1/2 hours worth of material, including the full version of "Black or White," which was cut short after its initial release due to violent imagery and Jackson's gyrations.

Jackson made a short film for the song "One More Chance," but it was never released. He was charged with sexual molestation in 2003, right around the time the single was released. He was acquitted in that case.

Other videos include Martin Scorsese (Scor-say-zee)-directed "Bad" and his most famous video, "Thriller."
