A photography exhibit at the World Forestry Center spotlights polar bears and climate change.

The Last Polar Bear: Facing the truth of a warming world

The World Forestry Center Discovery Museum's new environmental photography exhibit, The Last Polar Bear: Facing the Truth of a Warming World, brings to life the devastating urgency of global warming's impact on the Arctic as documented by the dramatic polar bear images by accomplished wild-life photographer Steven Kazlowski.

Kazlowski has dedicated more than eight years to tracking and photographing polar bears in their rarely visited and seldom photographed natural environment, documenting the change in their habitat and behavior over time. In The Last Polar Bear, 40 large-format color photographs reveal the plight of the polar bear as it faces rapid change in its Arctic coastal habitat from Hershel Island in Canada to Point Hope, Alaska.

Visitors to the exhibit will follow the path of these alpha-predators, learning about the unique biology of the polar bear and the Arctic web of life to which they belong. Intimate images portray the bears' annual cycle of life from mothers with cubs to adolescents at play to adults on the hunt. Film footage of wild polar bears by independent filmmaker Arthur C. Smith, III augment the photos on display.

The exhibit will be on view through Jan. 2. For more information, call 503-228-1367 or visit worldforestry.org.
