Multicultural Film Festival

Documentary explores wisdom keepers

The next presentation in the annual Multicultural Film Festival series presentation is The White Road -- Visions of the Indigenous People of the Americas, a documentary that explores the wisdom of indigenous people of North and South America.

Mrs. Norma Trimble will facilitate a discussion that follows the free showing, sponsored by the Jefferson High School community and North Portland Library.

The worlds' spiritual traditions, including those of the indigenous people, speak of the times we're in as a period of transformation, a time when the Earth must pass through the process of ascension.

"The White Road" takes you to the heart of the Yucatan, tracing the steps of the elders down the ancient thoroughfare that for the Mayans is a symbol for the pathway to spiritual knowledge. "El Camino Blanco" begins in Merida and goes from temple to temple with ceremonies and rituals, supported by commentary from elders and priestesses.

Join the Jefferson community for the screening in the North Portland Library's Second Floor Conference Room, 512 N. Killingsworth St., at 5 p.m. on Tuesday, Dec 14.

Eminem Tops Grammy Nominations

Cee Lo competes for song of the year

(AP) -- When Eminem was first nominated for album of the year some 10 years ago for "The Marshall Mathers LP," it marked a milestone for the Grammys as it chose to honor an album that was considered masterful in its artistry yet morally bankrupt in its values.

Last week, the Recording Academy once again nominated Eminem for album of the year along with nine other bids; and it again gave accolades to a foul but genius piece of work—CeeLo's "(Expletive) You,"

Eminem has been nominated for album of the year, some 10 years after his first album of the year nomination.

an infectious retro groove with an unforgettable, unprintable chorus.

The tune, which is so profane it had to be changed to "Forget You" for radio play, was nominated for two top Grammy honors: record and song of the year.

"It wasn't meant to be a radio song," said Cee Lo after the nominations. "It was meant to be something with flair and first impression and it really took on a life of its own, and I had no idea it would become what it is today."
