Happy Birthday 'Sam'

Asian elephant calf Samudra reached two milestones this month. He turned 3 on Aug. 23, and zoo keepers say he weighs almost 3,000 pounds. Sam is currently gaining about 3 pounds a day – quite an achievement for the zoo's littlest elephant!

He maintains his impressive growth rate by nursing and eating lots of hay and produce. Like many 3-year-olds, he prefers fruit to vegetables. In total, Sam and his mother Rose-Tu are offered 100 pounds of fresh food each day.

The Oregon Zoo is recognized worldwide for its successful Asian elephant breeding program, which has spanned nearly five decades. More than 25 elephants have been born at the zoo, beginning with Packy in 1962.

The zoo has earned an international reputation for its research and commitment to helping this endangered species.

Amazing Reptiles and Amphibians

Crawl, creep, and slither your way to one of the largest gatherings of reptiles and amphibians in the Pacific Northwest when the Oregon Museum of Science and Industry (OMSI) presents its 25th annual Reptile and Amphibian Show, Labor Day weekend, Sept. 3-5.

Nearly 100 exotic animals will be on display at this popular event, including a large variety of captive-bred snakes, lizards, turtles, frogs and more. Experts will be available throughout the weekend to answer questions about these amazing and often misunderstood creatures.

In addition to the many animals on view in the OMSI auditorium, there will be a hands-on area where visitors can touch non-venomous species. Several presentations will be shown throughout the weekend including the popular pancake tortoise drawing, Mr. Lizard's Mobile Zoo, and experts on venomous snakes.

The Reptile and Amphibian show returns to OMSI Labor Day weekend, Sept. 3-5.
