North Portland Celebration

The second annual "Celebration of North Portland" will take place on Saturday, March 17 in the Bauccio Commons on the University of Portland campus, 5000 N. Willamette Blvd.

The dinner event will begin at 6 p.m. and bring together community leaders, business owners, service clubs, neighborhood activists, the faith community, and education groups.

Selected individuals will be honored for their significant contributions to North Portland. The event offers an excellent opportunity to connect with neighbors, find out about ways to get involved with supporting the community, and learn about the history of the area.

Holly Duckworth, renowned speaker on volunteerism, will talk about the benefits of giving back to one's own community; and Duo Con Brio will provide musical entertainment throughout the evening.

"It's a great idea to come together to celebrate and recognize the people who have made North Portland what it is," said event organizers Dr. Dan Halko, Joanna Lawler, and Michael Verbout. "There is no shortage of people to honor who have given countless amounts of time and energy to make our community so special."

St. Johns Parade to Turn 50!

Neighborhood representatives are planning the 50th St. Johns Parade, an annual event in the north Portland community during Rose Festival.

Many community folks work hard to produce this awesome event with new and exciting additions each year. That's especially true this year as the parade has its 50th birthday.

One of the ideas is to enlarge historic photos and to place the photos on banners and have the photo banners interspersed throughout the parade. Because the parade operates on a small budget, the spirit of volunteering and donations of time and energy, resources and expertise is needed.

What are needed are professional photographers who will donate their time and possibly materials to enlarge and incorporate the photos on the banners.
