Portland's U-Krew built up a strong following with their mixture of hip-hop and R&B in the 1980s. The band will be reunited during a performances on Saturday at the Aladdin Theater during their induction into the Oregon Music Hall of Fame.

Induction into Oregon Musical Hall

U-krew, Everclear and other local musicians honored

Ten Oregon artists will be honored for their gifts to music at the 6th annual Oregon Music Hall of Fame, a benefit for the state's music education, to be held on Saturday, Oct. 6 at 7 p.m. at the Aladdin Theater.

To be eligible for the Hall of Fame, an artist or individual must have been born in Oregon and working in music professionally for 20 years or moved to Oregon and worked in music for 20 years.

This year's inductees include the successful rock band Everclear, which will guest perform; The Hudson Brothers of the razzle-dazzling 1970s; jazz musician Patrick Lamb; guitarist Chris Miller of the Rockin' Razorbacks; late 70s producer and drummer Calvin Walker; and U-Krew, a Portland hip-hop and R&B band which topped billboards in the mid- 1980s and will re-unite for their first performance in 20 years.

In 1984, U-Krew emerged on the scene in Portland as the Untouchable Krew with Kevin Morse, Larry Bell, Lavell Alexander, J.Mack and Hakim. Their mixture of hip-hop and R&B built up a strong local following. They soon shortened their name to U-Krew. In 1989 they were signed to Enigma Records and released their self-titled album, "The U-Krew," which hit #93 on the Billboard Top 200. There were two singles released as well; "If You Were Mine" reached #21 and "Let Me Be Your Lover" reached #68. U-Krew is credited with being the pioneers of the hip-hop scene in the state of Oregon.

Art Alexakis moved to Portland and started Everclear in 1992. After the band's first album "World of Noise" the group signed to Capitol Records and released five albums including two platinum and one double platinum.
