The Week in Review

PSU Student Attacked

Police are investigating the sexual attack of a Portland State University student. The woman in her 20s says she was walking to her dorm near Southwest 10th Avenue and Market Street about 3:15 a.m. Monday, when she was hit on the head and then sexually assaulted in an alley.

Walmart Security Kills Man

A man who allegedly stole two DVD players from a Walmart store in Georgia on the Black Friday Thanksgiving Day weekend, died when the store security guard put him in a choke hold. It happened Sunday after two Walmart employees and a contracted security guard chased him into the parking lot and a physical altercation ensued.

Arafat's Body Exhumed

The remains of the legendary Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat have been exhumed. Specimens will be taken to a lab to test for polonium, the same poison used to assassinate KGB spy-turned-dissident Alexander Litvinenko.

Powerball at $500 Million

The jackpot for Powerball reached $500 million Tuesday -- the richest Powerball pot ever -- and it's likely to get even sweeter before Wednesday's drawing. Lottery officials put the odds of winning the pot at one in 175 million

Naked Activists Arrested

Three AIDS activists saying they wanted to highlight the "naked truth" about potential spending cuts in HIV programs were arrested Tuesday after taking their clothes off in the lobby of House Speaker John Boehner's office. The protesters, along with dozens of other clothed demonstrators chanted slogans, including: "People with AIDS are under attack. What do we do? Fight back."

Lawsuit Challenges Ban on Women in Combat

The American Civil Liberties Union and four servicewomen sued the U.S. Defense Department on Tuesday to end a ban on women in combat, calling the military the last bastion of discrimination by the federal government and saying modern warfare has already put women in the line of fire.

Low Vacancy for Housing

Portland has the nation's fifth lowest housing vacancy rate. The analysis compiled by the Business Journal pints to a strengthening residential real estate market.
