The Lovejoy Fountain plaza in southwest Portland has been listed in the National Register of Historic Places.

Modern Spaces Now Historic

An innovative series of modern downtown Portland fountain plazas by world-renowned landscape architect Lawrence Halprin has been listed in the National Register of Historic Places.

Known individually as Keller Fountain, Pettygrove Park, Lovejoy Fountain, and the Source Fountain, the public plazas are located between Southwest Clay and Lincoln streets and First and Fourth Avenues and are connected by a system of pedestrian walkways. They are collectively called the "Portland

Open Space Sequence."

"Portland is well-known for the 1970s and 1980s transformation of its downtown with great public spaces like Waterfront Park and Pioneer Courthouse Square," said Randy Gragg, president of the Halprin Landscape Conservancy, the initiators of the nomination. "But it was Halprin's fountain plazas of the 1960s that first made downtown safe for fun."

'Secrets' Author at UP

Portland based author and performer Lois Leveen will speak and read from her work on Thursday, March 21, at 7:30 p.m. during a free and open to the public event at the Buckley Center on the University of Portland campus, 5000 N. Willamette Blvd.

Laveen's first novel, The Secrets of Mary Bowser, is based on the true story of a free black woman who became a spy for the Union Army during the Civil War by pretending to be a slave to the family of Confederate president Jefferson Davis.

Her work has appeared in numerous literary magazines, the New York Times, onstage at PerformanceWorks Northwest, on NPR's LiveWire, and in film festivals around the country.

A former faculty member at UCLA and Reed College, Leveen gives talks and leads classes at museums, libraries, and schools throughout the country.
